Graffiti pest jailed after tagging spree on QR trains and spray-painting dog's face

A GRAFFITI-tagger caused more than $50,000 in damage to public property during a relentless 44-month campaign of vandalism in which he sprayed painted anything that caught his eye - including a dog.

Bruin Robert Carlsson went on a 44-month graffiti spree, causing thousands of dollars in damage to property. The Brisbane District Court was told Bruin Robert Carlsson, 25, committed 350 acts of vandalism by tagging public property and one of animal cruelty throughout Brisbane's northern suburbs between January 2007 and September 2010.

The court was told Carlsson, then aged between 20 and 23, spray painted his tag "PAWN" on numerous trains and property belonging to Queensland Rail and the Brisbane City Council - causing a total of $51,458.41 in damage.

Carlsson was jailed for 18-months after today pleading guilty to 339 offences of graffiti, 11 of wilful damage and one of cruelty to an animal.

Judge Greg Koppenol ordered Carlsson spend at least four months in actual detention, saying the community justifiably demanded stiff penalties be imposed for such wanton and senseless acts of vandalism.

Prosecutors revealed Carlsson was arrested when a witness saw him and a friend spray-painting trains after stopping to let off passengers at the Toombul Railway Station, on Brisbane's northside, on September 17, 2010.

The court was told the witness contacted police when his pet dog confronted Carlsson - who responded by spraying paint in the dog's face.

Police, the court was told, had been travelling on the next train to arrive at Toombul and that officers quickly found Carlsson and arrested him.

The Crown revealed the matter was referred to the Queensland Police Service's graffiti taskforce, which was able to link Carlsson to hundreds of tags he had left on public property over a period of three years and eight months.

Documents tendered in court revealed the total cost of damage to Queensland Rail property was $39,983, while the Brisbane City Council's damage bill was put at $11,470.41.

The court was told one member of the public was $5 out of pocket after having had to purchase a bottle of methylated spirits to remove Carlsson's tag off their private motor vehicle.

Barrister Scott Lynch, for Carlsson, tendered a medical report, which included details about how his client was revered as a successful tagger within the Brisbane graffiti culture.

Judge Koppenol, in sentencing Carlsson, said: "I think animal cruelty is appalling."

"You also engaged in a lengthy and protracted spree of vandalism across the northern suburbs of Brisbane.

"This type of vandalism is an appalling blot on the appearance of our city."
